HINTS Women Readers

TAFFETA AND VOILE COSTUME.
The sketch today shows again the new basque effect which promises to be so popular. The material used is dahlia-colored taffeta combined with voile of the same shade striped with white. The upper and lower part of the bodice and the basque are of the taffeta, as is the band on the bottom of the skirt. The center of the bodice and the sleeves are of the voile cut with stripes running horizontally. A short band of the taffeta placed beside a shorter one of dahlia-colored embroidery runs from shoulder to bust on the left. This same trimming is put on the broad band of taffeta on the skirt.

NEGLIGES ARE NECESSARY NOW IN MILADY'S WARDROBE

Negliges assume a position of great importance in milady's hot-weather wardrobe, and many and bewitching are the conceits put forth in the guise of lovely house gowns. Daintiness and skill in the planning are evident in this most feminine of garments, and utility and art are combined in it.
Some negliges are very much on the order of the most fashionable frocks of the season, which distinctly exploit graceful and picturesque lines and sometimes give the impression, as Parisian dress-makers intend, of an uncorseted figure beneath.
For summer wear the washable materials are naturally preferred, including silks which wash, such as crepe de chine and habutai, while silk mulls in floral effects and daintily designed dotted swisses make up charmingly for the more dressy negliges, which one wears informally as a house gown. Some of these house gowns are works of art and wonderfully becoming.

A lovely negligee or house gown recently displayed was of pale-pink crepe de chine. The high-waisted skirt in empire effect was accordion-plaited and opened in front. The simple waist was draped with a fichu effect of pale-pink chiffon laid in folds at the shoulder and the back showed similar folds of the chiffon, which formed a deep, square collar. The joining of these fichu parts at the shoulders was accented by Valenciennes insertion, and the entire fichu was edged with a frilling of Valenciennes lace.

Silk and Foulard.
Another house gown seen recently was made of pink silk. The gown was made with empire waist line. There was a crossed fichu of lace, and lace frills formed the short sleeves and fell in a cascade down the left side of the tunic, and also trimmed the bottom of the tunic skirt. There was a tucked bodice of terial that should win favor. It is named on account of the unusual softness and thick, woolly feeling of the fabric. It comes in a number of rich shades.

Mixed tweed is coming to the front, as it does almost every season. In most cases the stripes are not very conspicuous, but occasionally there is some such startling apparition as was noticed in Manhattan a few days ago. This gown was in gray with white stripes, the gray being about an inch wide and the white narrow but well defined. The stripes were arranged diagonally, and the whole was accentuated by bandings of wide black silk braid.
Ombre silk in new combinations, with gold and green tones prominent, makes many of the advance models in fall gowns. Black velvet is a favorite trimming on these frocks.
Bi-Colored Buttons.
Bi-colored buttons are a part of the decorative scheme on many a suit and dress. Of course, the fabric buttons with rims of black appear, but there are also some novelties in wood or metal or composition of some sort, with the high note of the color scheme in the center, fading off into black or another color toward the edges. Two-tone velvet buttons and ombre effects are well liked. These fancy buttons go far toward relieving the severity of the tailored costumes.
New Evening Fabric.
An exquisite new fabric for evening wear is a sheer, silky stuff with trails of flowers woven in a color, and with "dew-drops" sparkling in between the floral pattern. Worn over a delicate color such as a pale green or lemon the effect of this fairylike material is charming.
Fringe is the trimming for everything a woman wears these days, with the exception of shoes, and probably it will be long before fringed evening slippers or some such oddity will make its appearance.

Fringe in Favor.
The fringe has been well received on its invasion into the tailor realm. A suit of black broadcloth or some other very conventional material is made richer and more dressy, without losing its distinctively tailored appearance, by a judicious introduction of long, silky, black fringe in the trimming. A few inches may find their way on to the sleeve of a gown or coat. The whole bottom of a skirt may be bordered with it. The loose panels, back or front or side, are sure to end in deep fringe.
A fichu effect may be obtained by a fold of material edged with long fringe. Hats of silk have long fringes swaying in the breeze after the fashion of willow plumes, and ribbon for hat trimming may be fringed over the crown of the hat or along both edges. Parasols have fringed fringes for some time, and tasseled gloves are naturally adorned with a fringed fringe, extending the idea of one or two tassels to a line of fringing.
The value for having a sheer material over taffeta or satin or chiffon of a contrasting color has suffered no diminution.

Velours and Plush.
Velours is used to a considerable extent for the making of hats, and a soft plush of black broadcloth or some other very conventional material is made richer and more dressy, without losing its distinctively tailored appearance, by a judicious introduction of long, silky, black fringe in the trimming. A few inches may find their way on to the sleeve of a gown or coat. The whole bottom of a skirt may be bordered with it. The loose panels, back or front or side, are sure to end in deep fringe.

Fichu on Negliges.
For those whom it suits, the fichu is vastly becoming in its grace and quaintness. But woe betide the dame to whose figure it is not adapted, should she follow fashion blindly. The fichu on the well-developed figure has a decided tendency to produce a broad, ample and matronly effect.
If there is one garment which forgives such a tendency it is the negligee; so here it may be used almost universally.
Laces, which are used in such profusion this season, are employed effectively on the house gown, often producing quite a beautiful and rich effect. Wide lace cascading down the front or side of the negligee is one of the marked features of the season. A remarkably attractive negligee of this type, made of lawn, which is shown among the small cuts, was copied from a French model made of silken material. The negligee is made with a sailor collar, trimmed with a wide frill of lace. The lace frill extends down the front of the gown. The empire bodice is made with the kimono sleeve and is trimmed with bands of lace. The skirt is trimmed with lace insertion and tucks.
Voiles and marquisettes are used extensively for house gowns. These materials have the advantage of enduring much wear and yet remaining fresh looking without any appearance of mussiness.
The striped marquisettes make up very attractive and give long lines of grace and slenderness which are of importance in such a garment. Embroidered marquisettes are also very much favored this season. A remarkably attractive negligee was recently shown with panels front and back, which were embroidered in heavy white silk. These panels were outlined with narrow full-length bands, also embroidered, as were the edges of the wide drooping sleeves, which were of a design very similar to that of the genuine oriental kimono.

THE DAILY CHIT-CHAT.

By Ruth Cameron.

Which would you rather have when you go a-visiting, elaborate and fussy fare especially gotten up for your delectation, and a hostess dined out by the extra exertions, and unconsciously hoping that you won't come again too soon, or your share of the family fare and a serene and undisturbed hostess who is not deterred by weariness from enjoying her making you enjoy your visit to the full and from genuinely hoping you'll come again soon?
I can't imagine but one answer to that query.
And yet, how many hostesses give their guests the credit of being decent enough to visit them for their conversation and friendship rather than their food?
How many women have the common sense and large-mindedness to insist that their hospitality shall always be a pleasure rather than a burden?
Perhaps one in five, but I doubt it.
To all too many housemothers "company" is synonymous with "bother," and "unexpected company" with "catastrophe."

And in many houses where formal hospitality is a thing of the past, the guest-guest-to-my mind, the essence of hospitality—is an unknown quantity.
On my list of friends I have not happy to include a certain middle-aged couple who have what appears to me as an ideal attitude toward the subject of entertaining. These people almost never entertain formally. A weekly "afternoon at home" and an occasional casual arranged card party are their biggest concessions to formal hospitality.
But in informal hospitality they fairly revel.
The husband is always free to bring home a guest whenever he wishes, and the wife, of course, the wife's woman friends feel free to drop in at any time, and the children frequently bring their young friends to the house.
A guest here does not disturb the family routine in the least. He shares the family fare. He never feels that he is in the way at all. On the maid's night out the well known guests are sometimes invited into the kitchen to join the family circle there while the dishes are being disposed of, and many a young bachelor has even enjoyed the job of doing an apron and helping out.
As to the ways and means, the housemother says: "We usually have plenty to eat in the house, and plenty for four can generally be expanded to enough for five. For the occasion when my fare needs giving out I keep a stock of canned vegetables and soup and preserves.
"If we run out of anything, we laugh at it together, and the novelty of this treatment of the situation usually pleases the guests.
"Hospitality has been one of the greatest pleasures of our married life, and I think it is just because we make up our minds at the beginning to enjoy our friends in a simple way and never to insult them by getting our entertainments to become a burdensome duty. If we lost any friends in this way, we felt they would hardly be friends worth keeping."

To quote the poet, "Them's my sentiments, too," and I wish they were sent to you.

Swift & Co.'s Sales of Fresh Beef
In Washington for the week ending Saturday, Aug. 12, averaged 8.3c per lb.—Adv.

New designs in dainty collars of real lace and Irish crocheted hosiery samples, almost cover the shoulders and show a deep, square back and front, while the collar is made of gold or aluminum thread, are very smart.

Fabrics and Trimmings.
Baby lamb broadcloth is a new fall material that should win favor.

Anty Drudge Cures a Sick Headache.

Dr. Fudge—"Does Mrs. Junebride live here?"
Anty Drudge—"No—next door. I found her out in the back kitchen crying over her wash. The poor dear isn't used to such hard work, and she has a sick headache from it. I took the wash from her and quickly finished it with Fels-Naptha. She won't need you again on that score."
Dr. Fudge—"Well, really, Anty Drudge, washday is responsible for more ills than most people imagine. I am glad you have taken Mrs. Junebride under your wing. Fels-Naptha is the ounce of prevention that is worth my pound of cure."

Delicate summer curtains, draperies, tapestries, laces, women's fine raiment—things that would be ruined by washing in the old-fashioned way—can be cleaned at home with Fels-Naptha as well as an expert cleaner could do it.

Fels-Naptha contains no injurious chemicals; nothing that could harm the most delicate fabric. Sets colors instead of making them run as most soaps do.

With Fels-Naptha, use only cold or lukewarm water—never hot. That saves the fabric. Hot water would soften it and cause fraying.

Fels-Naptha dissolves the dirt; you don't have to rub it loose as with ordinary soap.

More than a million women do their washing with Fels-Naptha. They have found out that Fels-Naptha is the best and easiest way.

Follow directions on the red and green wrapper.
